KENTUCKY ATHLETE.

Tumblers Born in Paducah.

Possibly not a dozen persons in the vast audiences that thronged the tents of the Forepaugh-Sells Brothers' show at the two performances Friday knew that one of the chief performers, a top-liner on the program, was a Paducahan—born and bred, says the Paducah News-

Dan O'Brien, the premier leaper in the revival of the old-time tumb-ing act, from a springboard, which ormed a feature of the circus, first formed a feature of the circus, first saw the light of day in this city forty years ago. Today he ranks with Charley Wertz, now with the Barnum & Bailey show, the two being regarded as the champion lofty tumblers of the world.

This was O'Brien's first visit to Paducah for several years, and only one or two of his former acquaintances recognized him. As a boy he used to turn files on the quaintances recognized him. As a boy he used to turn flips on the sawdust pile back of the old Langtaff mills, where several other lesser lights in the circus arena of this and other days had their first training. He developed into a splendid athlete, with an especial kack for tumbling, and soon graduated into the ranks of the professionals.

O'Brien has the record of being one of the very few men who extremed a triple somersault and lived to tell of it. This feat was performed in this city some fifteen years ago, when he had less reputation than he now enjoys, and was employed by a ten-cent circus. Knowing some of his friends were in the audience, he undertook to turn a fancy double off the spring. United States. It is a good photobard, but bounced too high and graph on plain paper, with no fiber his pool on his back uninjured. Almost always when a daring tumbler essays a triple he strikes on his neck and breaks his spine. O'Brien has the record of being

HUGE JOKE

Terminates Into a Very Serious Affair at Adams.

This bit of romance comes from the fittle city of Adams Station, and is given as it appeared in the Banner from the Springfield correspondent:

A little incident happened near Adams a short while ago which receitly leaked out and proves to be a jake of more serious proportious than contemplated. The star players in this romantic occurrence are two prominent society people, one a well-known young physician of Adams, the other a young lady of Pembroke, Ky. That, they are practical jokers is unquestioned, and their intention to go the limit is quite evident.

On a pleasant summer evening, a short time since, when the most inget flowed Old Robertson with its glory, and oothing went save that tinged with the romantic or that in which the love god appeared to play at least a minor part, Dr. L. F. Sory and Miss Lizzie Payne, armed with marriage license is assed under assumed names from the state of Tennessee by the County Court Clerk of this county, and accompanied by Miss Annie Winters and Mr. George Fort journeyed in buggies to the home of Squire Charles H., and Sterling Fort.

If was a pleasant drive of three or four miles until they reached the night with his brother, Hon, Joel Fort, only a short distance away. This the party well knew before arriving, and after Dr. Sory and Miss Payne had administered charcoal until a thoroughbred African effect was realized and practicing a little negro dialect, they took the colored coke and hired man with them to Joel Fort.

The two colored people went in and told Squire Fort some of their colored friends were at the gate years and the sught of the colored friends were at the gate with the mery blook the colored coke and hird many with them to Joel Fort.

THE SECRETIVE GIRL.

Every Man There Has to Work for Begging doesn't go in my native land," said A. F. Watch, in speaking of the famine in Finland, according to the Philadelphia Record. "If a man asks for bread he is given a opportunity to earn it, never the money to buy it. It is this policy, generation after generation, that has made the Finnish people prefer death to begging as it is understood here. The farmers begin to sow in June and seed potatoes and rye, and and one better than he had ever experienced before.

But after reflection the situation took a more serious aspect. The marriage licenae was issued by the county court clerk of this county, the proper officer to issue them, and Squire Fort was 'clothed with all the power and authority necessary to execute the licenae, being a justice of the peace, duly elected, qualified, and sworn. The names were fictious, but people had marriate before under assumed names, and the fore the best legal talent cossulted declare the marriage legal.

Squire Fort while making no pretensions as a joker, is the hero of the hour, but as to how Dr. Sory of Adams and Miss Payne of Pembroke are cipying the sensation, and whether they appreciated fully fraught it has not been learned.

THE LION AND THE BIKER. Signs Not Always a Safe Index in An Adventure in Which the King of Basts Gets a Scare.

On a mellow moonlight evening a cyclist was 'riding along a lonely rout in the northern part of Mashon-land, says the Philadelphia Ledger. As he rode, enjoying the somber beauty of the African evening, he studenty became conscious of a soft, steatilty, heavy tread on the road behind him. It seemed like the jog trot of some heavy, cushion-footed annual following him. Turning around, he was seared very badly to find himself looking into the glaring eyes of a large lion. The puzzled animal setel very strangely, now raising his head, now lowering it, and raising his head, now lowering it, and all the time sniffing the air in a most all the time sniffing the air in a most perplexed manner.

Here was a surprise for the lion. He could not make out what kind of animal it was that could roll, walk and sit still all at the same time; an animal with a red eye on each side, and a brighter one in front. He hestitated to pounce upon such an outlandish being, a being whose blood smelled so of the same and the same time; and smelled so oily landish being, a being whose blood smelled so oily.

No cyclist since the Romans invented wheels ever "scorched" with more honest and single miniculous of the propose. But although he pedaled and pedaled, although he pedaled and pedaled, although he perspired and panted, his effort to get away did not seem to place any more territory between him and the lion; for that animal, like Mark Twain's coyote, kept up his annoyingly calm jog trot, and never seemed to tire.

The poor rider, was finally so exhausted from terorr and exertion that he decided to have the matter over with right away. Suddenly slowing down he jumped from his wheel, and facing abruptly about, thrust the brilliant headlight full into the face of the lion.

This was too much for the beast. It was this fright that broke the lion's nerve, for at this fresh evidence of mystery on the part of the strange rider animal, who broke himself into halves and then cast his big eye in any direction he pleased, the monarch of the forest turned fail, and with a wild rush retreated in a very hyenslike manner into the jungle, evidently thanking his stars for his miraculous escape from that awful being. Thereupon the bieveliat, with new strength returning, devoutly blessing his acetylene lamp, pedaled his way to civilization. devoutly blessing his acetylene pedaled his way to civilization.

on this region is revewed in the revius Scientifique. This creature uses live seasancomones as weapons, or perhaps as traps to secure its food—
the exact purpose is as yet obscure.
Says the writer, describing this interesting crustacean;
"It is a small crab of the genus Melia—a new species, having been described in 1900 by M. Borradaile
under the name of Melia tessellatu.
This crab lives among the branches of coral, and, as Richter noted in 1880, it is never seen without a small sea-anemore in each claw.
Invariably, when met, it is provided with its two anemones, one in the right claw, one in the left, and it double burden. Why? We do not know. We do know, however, that the crab holds the aremone voluntarily; it is held in the claw, not fixed on it. And when it is taken away
the crab seizes it again; otherwise it goes and finds another. It appears to be satisfied only when its two claws are thus occupied, although occasionally a Melia is met with empty claws. We that is the reason for this curious habit of the species? Does the crab use the amenore sea means of defense? May not the strigging cells of the amenores protect it against some enemy? Or does it use them as devices for fishing, causing them to gramp victims that come in cells of the anemones protect it against some enemy? Or does to use them as devices for fishing; causing them to grasp victims that come in contact with their tentacles? We do not know. It is certain, however, that the crab's claws are weak and frail; they could hardly serve unassisted as means of deferne. And when attacked he defends himself by stretching out the anemones in the adversary's direction. Here is an ancient habit whose origin and exact object are not apparent. It is worth noting; we know few cases of animals that use tools, especially living tools."
